Dear Parishioners,

Family psychologist John Rosemond is one of the most popular speakers in the field of parenting. His approach to raising children is traditional and full of common sense (which seems to be in short supply today). Recently he wrote a short article called "Parenting 101 – 10 Fundamentals of Effective Child Rearing." I thought I would share five with you this week and five next week. I hope you find these helpful:

- 1) If you are married with children, put your marriage first. You should pay more attention to your spouse, talk more to your spouse, do more for your spouse, and spend more time with your spouse than you do with your children. There is nothing that more effectively secures a child's sense of well-being than knowing his/her parents are taking care of their relationship.
- 2) If you are single with children, have lots of interests outside of your interest in your children. Have hobbies, friends, activities and a job that take your attention away from your children. Your life should never revolve around your children—their lives should revolve around yours.
- 3) By the time your children are three years old, you should build a boundary between yourself and them, one that limits their access to you. Let them know that you are not at their beck and call, that you have a life beyond being their mother and father, and insist that they respect your privacy.
- 4) Say "No" more than you say "Yes." Actually, the proportion should be at least five to one. The only children who can't take "No" for an answer have parents who do not say it often enough and cannot say it with conviction.
- 5) Put the horse of leadership in front of the cart of relationship. The secret to effective discipline is not manipulating consequences cleverly; rather it is assuming a posture of loving leadership in their lives. Leadership is a simple matter of acting like you a) know what you're doing, b) know where you're going, c) know what you want, and d) know you are going to get it.

Stay tuned for the final five. God bless you in the week ahead.

Wisdom of the Saints

“There's nothing so great, my children, as the Eucharist. If you were to put all the good actions in the world against a Communion well made, it would be like a grain of dust against a mountain.”
